CHAPTER 4.

LARCENY AND RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

Larceny.
R. § 4237.
C. § 51, § 2212.

SECTION 3902. If any person steal, take, and carry away of the property of another, any money, goods, or chattels; any writ, process, or public record; any bond, bank note, promissory note, bill of exchange, or other bill, order, or certificate; or any book of accounts respecting money, goods, or other things; or any deed or writing containing a conveyance of real estate; or any contract in force; or any receipt, release, or defeasance; or any instrument or writing whereby any demand, right, or obligation is created, increased, extinguished, or diminished, he is guilty of larceny, and shall be punished, when the value of the property stolen exceeds the sum of twenty dollars, by imprisonment in the penitentiary not more than five years; and when the value of the property stolen does not exceed the sum of twenty dollars, by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty days.

To constitute larceny, the property must have been feloniously taken from the owner without his consent, or obtained by false representations, etc. If given by the owner to the defendant by virtue of his employment as agent, servant, or otherwise, and afterwards converted, the offense is embezzlement: Ennis v. The State, 3 Gr. 67.

If the original possession of the property was innocent, a subsequent conversion will not constitute larceny: The State v. Wood, 46-116.

The ownership of property need not be shown to have been in the party from whom it was taken, if it was in his possession: The State v. Stanley, 48-221.

A taking from the person is not necessary to constitute larceny, (a special penalty therefor being provided in § 3905, and picking up money dropped by another, with unlawful intent, and converting the same to one's own use without the knowledge of the owner, is sufficient to constitute the offense: The State v. Pratt, 20-267.

If one sell or dispose of the property of another under the well founded, though erroneous, belief that he is authorized so to do, he is not guilty of larceny: The State v. Barckmore, 47-684.

Where an auctioneer employed to sell impounded animals sold one of them as his own, and it was taken away by the purchaser, held, that there was sufficient taking to constitute larceny on the part of the person selling: The State v. Hunt, 45-673.

"Money" and "bank notes" are subjects of larceny: The State v. Carr, 43-418; and an indictment describing such money and notes as "gold and silver coin" and "Clark's Exchange Bank bills of the value of," etc., held sufficient: Munson v. The State, 4 Gr. 483; so, also, an indictment held sufficient which charged the taking of "a promissory note for the payment of money, commonly called a
